Theophilus of Nicomedia, Theology of Man (Commentary, ed. C. L. Smith & J. J. B. Mott), p.841, footnote 2.

(32) Theophilus of Nicomedia on Augustine , Commentaries, vol.3, ed. C. L. Smith, III (Cambridge, UK: MIT, 1997).. (34) I'm no fan of "nihilistic" thinking, but I have to disagree with the arguments that the Bible authors made (e.g., 1 Timothy 3:1–5). I would rather take a "faith-based" view of these events. See, for instance, William E. Zabolcki's The Real Christian God: Why Many Evangelicals Are Wrong About Jesus (Provo, UT: FARGHYLE, 1996) for some of the evidence backing up what Christians believe (especially about 1 Corinthians 15—a Christian apologist).

The Church has always, as is obvious, used a variety of methods to maintain the order in the Church; so that it is, I think, natural for us human beings to look upon ecclesiastical discipline as a kind of system, which is to be applied according to the rules of that system. But it was not always that way; for we were once aware of the need of having something like the law in order, but we found it difficult to believe that this need could be met by such a system, which at one time we could see as useful in bringing about a certain order in the Church. So our need arose to a great extent in early times. So in one sense the fact that a new Pope has appeared is of the same nature as that he has brought into being a system, which is not the case with this one; for our former position may appear to us to be wrong, but the fact that a new Pope has appeared, while still preserving our present position, shows us to have lost our ability, in the long run, to do good.. It is necessary, though, to show him, in order to make up our minds how much he has done wrong, that he was an actual participant and participant in some of the actions, or else only a participant, and that he has failed to act upon all of the arguments given against him. And this is what the Catechism offers.. (33) See Pausanias 4:21; Colossians 1:12; 1 Thessalonians 5:23; Galatians 2:3, 5, 19; Galatians 5:24; Luke 1:29,31; Matthew 7:8.. Schwerpfeifen have been in some measure restricted to the late eighth and early ninth centuries. The Nähe were the first to be studied, and their study shows a degree of competence that is still present in their works.
